How to Make Coffee.

The making good coffee is a rare thing in this country; most persons boil it, thus making a decoction instead of an infusion; this effectually gets rid of the delicate and agreeable aromatic flavor, and leaves a comparatively tasteless beverage. The following particulars will be found worth attention:

Never buy your coffee ground, but grind it yourself, immediately before using it; keep your coffee-pot, whatever kind you may use, wiped clean and dry inside; a damp tea or coffee-pot acquires a musty flavor that spoils the best tea or coffee. The cheapest and perhaps the best coffee-pots are those made on the French plan, called cafetieres. If you have not one of these adopt the following plan: Put your freshly ground coffee into the coffee-pot, previously made warm, and pour upon it water actually boiling; set the pot by the fire for a few seconds, but do not let it boil up; then pour a cupful out and return it back again to the pot in order to clear it, having done this, let it stand on the hot or centre to settle, and in less than five minutes a transparent, strong aromatic cup of coffee may be poured out. The proportions of coffee (which should not be too finely ground) recommended are an ounce to a pint or a pint and a half of water.

The milk used with coffee should always be boiled, and used as hot as possible; the boiling of milk imparts a peculiar and exceeding pleasant flavor to the coffee. White sugar is recommended as the molasses like flavor of moist sugar quite overpowers the delicate aroma.

The Foot-Rot in Sheep.

Weigh equal quantities of verdigris, gunpowder and finely powdered blue vitrol; add as much vinegar and sweet oil in equal proportions as will make a rather thick paste; keep it carefully covered in a jar or pot, so as to exclude the air effectually, otherwise the strength of the paste will be in a great measure destroyed, and the same good will not result from the use of it. Be careful to cut away all decayed and ragged parts of the hoof without making it bleed if possible. If suppuration has taken place, carefully clean away all fetid matter and with a piece of rag or sponge a little wetted in warm water wipe the affected parts as dry as can be; then apply the paste and rub it in gently, without causing the blood to run, if you can, as I have found that the less irritation is caused the quicker will be the cure. If the disease be obstinate, a dose of salts will expedite a cure. The dressing must be repeated pretty frequently at first and then at longer intervals, according as the disease seems to require it. When the dressing is done the sheep should be kept on dry ground for a few hours at least to give the diseased parts time to absorb the strength of the paste before coming in contact with wet or dirt which would at first greatly diminish its good effects.

CURE OF CROUP.—An exchange referring to the fact of a doctor in Heidelberg and two of his assistants having died of croup in consequence of sucking the blood flowing during a successful operation of tracheotomy, stated that the disease is always curable by a very simple remedy, even when the patient is on the verge of suffocation. This consists, first, in applying water to the throat by means of a sponge or soft cloth, so hot as to be very painful to the hand of the operator, instant relief being usually afforded. After this has been continued for fifteen or thirty minutes, a poultice of linseed meal, rolled up in a cloth, is to be applied while very hot, and left on for some time. The remedies are to be repeated should the attack return; but the writer states that after a long experience he has never known them to fail.

ORCHARD SUCKERS.—Many otherwise good apple orchards are allowed to become defaced as well as seriously injured, by allowing a profusion of suckers to grow at the base of the trunks. Attempts are sometimes made to get rid of them, by cutting them off to the surface of the ground and leaving considerable portions below in the form of short stumps. They sprout again and they soon become as bad as ever. A better way is to wait until they are in leaf, at which time they are loosened more readily, and taking each sprout separately in the hands, and placing a thick boot upon it near the tree, they are quickly separated. If done at this time of the year, they will not be likely to sprout again.

GREEN WOOD.—Never buy or use green wood. It contains about one third its whole weight of water, in the form of sap. When burned, a considerable portion of the fibre of the wood is consumed in heating this water, so as to raise it from the common temperature to the point necessary to expel it in the form of steam. All the heat required to evaporate water weighing one third as much as the weight of the wood, is lost in the escaping steam. Besides the inconvenience of burning green wood, then there is a positive loss of as much as is required to convert the sap into steam.

SHEEP IN THE ORCHARD.—A prominent orchardist informs the Prairie Farmer that in one of his orchards where sheep ran during the season, the apple crop was almost entirely unaffected by the codling moth. Next season his entire orchard will be pastured with sheep. This is an item worth remembering.

HORSES.—To prevent horses being teased with flies, take walnut leaves boil them, and when cold sponge the horse or parts most irritable, and flies will not trouble the animal.

BEANS.—The cheapest and most nutritious vegetable used for food is beans. Prof. Liebig says that pork and beans form a compound of substances peculiarly adapted to furnish all that is necessary to support life.
